A BRIEF HISTORY OF WATERFRONT HOTEL

Down the Belgian block road in Baltimore's Fells Point neighborhood sits the city's second-oldest brick building. The Waterfront Hotel was built as a private residence for Thomas Long who leased the lot from the wife of Edward Fell in 1771.

Ten years later, the property was sold to a merchant who then sold it in 1791 to Cumberland Duġan, an Irish immigrant from Londonderry, who would convert the home into a hotel after the beginning of the Civil War (1861-1865). The hotel housed the troops and sailors and remained this way until the end of World War II. The property would eventually be inherited by his grandson.

In 1948 the building was bought by Mr. James Dembowski, a member of the Maryland Legislature, who purchased the building as a hotel and tavern. The building was discontinued as a hotel in 1955.

In 2022, local restaurateurs led by Atlas Restaurant Group purchased Waterfront Hotel and continue to operate as a tavern bar hosting live music every night.
